The Postmaster General's Report

THE Postmaster General has the problems of the biggest of big businesses with one hundred million customers, the only business which has been unable to increase prices as costs have increased. For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, despite an increase of revenue of $26,341,062, bringing the total revenue to $463,491,274, the increased cost reaching $620,993,673 leaves an unbalanced deficit of $157,517,688. This included an accumulation of $76,130,301 increased remuneration to railroads under decision by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and $41,855,000 increased salaries within the Department, the former item, in large part retroactive, swelling the present year's deficit to an extent that will not be repeated. These outstanding figures suggest that if the Post Office is to be made self-supporting, tho not a source of profit, the country must face an increase of postage probably on all classes of mail matter.

In facing these conditions, the Postmaster General wisely says: "If it were a question between the best practical service on the one hand and a poorer service with revenue meeting cost on the other hand, decision should be resolved in favor of rendering the service." This shows the right spirit in handling the business of the people, and users of the mail should meet any suggestion for increased prices in a like considerate spirit.

Too much praise can scarcely be given Postmaster General Hays for his course in revolutionizing from the top the restrictive and oppressive methods which had grown up partly as a result of the war and partly from the personal equation of his predecessor. Mr. Hays' administration has been characterized by common sense and by efforts toward "humanizing" the Department, which are indeed a happy change. No department of the government has more need to cast off the trammels of red tape, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Hays will resist the temptation of the movies, which are rumored to be offering him a salary of $100,000 a year, and stick to his job until the Post Office Department becomes a model of business administration in its service to the people.

The first need in this direction is a thorough reorganization of the Post Office laws, so that it may be reshaped as an effective business corporation. This was provided for in the measure which passed the Senate and the House of Representatives during the sessions of different Congresses, so that it never became law. At present a joint Postal Commission of Senators and Representatives, with postal experts and an advisory committee of citizens and with Mr. McDermott of the Senate Post Office Committee as Secretary, is working on these problems with the expectation of presenting a general and comprehensive report next summer. As the present session of Congress can scarcely find place for such legislation, legal changes may well wait the report of this Commission, which it is to be hoped may reintroduce the provisions of the law referred to, while freeing the Department from the meticulous provisions for its bookkeeping which swelled the proposed measure into a volume of several hundred pages.

That measure provided for the replacement of the Assistant Postmasters General by superintendents of eight departments into which the business of the department logically divides itself, with a Director of Post as the immediate subordinate of the Postmaster General who remains a cabinet officer, naturally of the same political relations as the President and changing with a change of administration. Otherwise, the Department is to be non-political as it should be.

Mr. Hays as party manager developed an executive experience which has led him to recognize that a business like that of the Post Office cannot be run as a political machine, and as a matter of fact the only offices which have been treated as political "plums" under party pressure have been those of the four Assistant Postmasters General. The first result of these changes was to deprive the Department of the services of John C. Koons, who had won his way from his civil service examinations as a clerk to the post of First Assistant Postmaster General, a man who knew the Post Office thru and thru like Theodore N. Vail, and who, like Vail, has now been captured by the telephone interests. With the exception of the just reappointment of Mr. Edward M. Morgan to succeed as Postmaster of New York Thomas L. Patten, a man of the highest quality but a partisan appointee, there have been almost no changes among first class postmasters, and it is to be regretted that President Harding yielded to political pressure in failing to accept the recommendation, in which it is understood the Postmaster General and the Chairman of the Senate Postal Committee joined, that the highest, instead of one of the highest three, on the examination list should be appointed to first class postmastership in accordance with the executive order made by President Wilson.

The publishers of books and periodicals should be keenly responsive to the admirable spirit which the new Postmaster General is introducing into the Department and should give appreciative consideration to any specific recommendations which he may make. An increase in bulk rates as well as in parcel post and perhaps letter rates may possibly be made, and it is to be hoped that in connection with these there may be reforms which will do away with some of the present contradictions and absurdities. It still costs two cents to deliver a semi-monthly periodical published in New York to subscribers within the city, altho it may be sent to San Francisco and delivered there at the bulk rate of one cent per pound plus advertising increment as is the case at the office of publication as well as thruout the country for weekly publications. There are still six or seven distinct rates of postage for printed matter which are provided by law and cannot be modified except by law, but one reform is in the hands of the Postmaster General himself, and it would be well if he would appoint a committee of postal experts and of publishers to make recommendations to him which would do away with the fifty-eleven and more rulings which cumber the Post Office regulations in restriction of periodicals, and replace them by a simplified and common sense body of rules or definitions.

We congratulate the publishing trade that at the head of the Post Office Department there is now a man keenly alive to the public interest, sympathizing with progress and ready to listen to all suggestions which can be made by those who serve the public, provided they are made in the spirit of better service to that public.

Renewing Tariff Discussion

NOW that the Congress is re-convened and the question of tax revision is out of the way, the discussion on tariff will be presented rapidly, and during the current month there will be hearings on the book schedules. The unfortunate aspects of this schedule from the point of view of all of those who buy or distribute books have been pointed out, but the chief features should be clearly in everyone's mind.

Tariff on books in foreign languages is not desired nor is it necessary, and it will be a great hardship to our large foreign born population, while producing but little revenue. The tariff on books over twenty years old has no protection value and will prevent the bringing into this country of many important books that should enrich our private libraries.

The application to books of the much debated American Valuation clause is, of course, unfortunate, and the extra protection it gives is not asked for or desired by publishers or the book-trade. There is no way to judge accurately the American valuation of a book manufactured in another country. The Customs House will be under the greatest difficulty to make such estimates, as no two books can be exactly compared. To compare one octavo book of science with another octavo book of science is to throw out of the calculation all kinds of elements that enter into the cost.

Mr. Macrae of E. P. Dutton & Company will represent the National Association of Book Publishers at a hearing on December 21st before the Senate Committee, and his opposition to the features above emphasized is supported also by the representations to the Committee by Charles E. Butler of Brentano's, New York, for the American Booksellers' Association.

The opposition of the public libraries and educational interests of the country will be presented at the hearing by Dr. M. Llewellyn Raney, librarian of Johns Hopkins University, and chairman of the Bookbuying Committee of the American Library Association.

A protection schedule that is desired by no branch of the book-trade, is opposed by every educational interest of the country and will produce but little revenue, should certainly be omitted from the Fordney Bill.

Christmas in the Bookshops

By Christopher Morley

THERE are only two ways of writing about Christmas and getting the thing published. Either the wretched author must write his piece a long time ahead (probably in the hot, sneezy and languid weather of late August, so that the artist can have it in time to rush off some nice snow-pictures before September 10th, which the editor has fixed as a deadline)—or else he can sit down on Christmas Eve itself, aching in every limb after trimming the tree and persuading the children to go to sleep and tying up the packages and hastening down to the village to buy that pair of socks for the furnace man (who had been forgotten) and making a private trip to the old back door up the alley to see whether the bottle of smuggled Scotch, promised by Tim Dolan, has arrived safely—he can sit down then, I repeat, and really write something genuine about Christmas. For it is only actually at Christmas time that the real Christmas Spirit, like the real Christmas hootch, permeates the person. In that general diffusion and glow of good temper and kindness, even a bootlegger, if attired like Santa Claus, could deliver his illicit parcels under the very eye of the revenue squad. For what federal agent would be hard-hearted enough to insist upon tearing open the packages so charmingly criss-crossed with red ribbon and inscribed "Do Not Open Until Christmas."

But the editor of this periodical asked me to write something about Books at Christmas. A highly ill-advised request, putting me in an ungraceful position. Suppose he were to ask the president of the American Radiator Company to write an essay "On the Delights of Being Warm" would not that gentleman feel he had been put in the posture of seeming an interested party? How can I, who have just finished reading the proofs of a book entitled "Plum Pudding" and given it that title for the express purpose of cozening you (noble friends!) into buying it as a Christmas present for someone—how can I honorably speak of Books at Christmas? To be honest, I should have to beg you to have nothing to do with any bookshops at all, except indeed the second-hand variety.

But I will say this, that the Christmas story I have always hankered to write, and perhaps may get round to some day, will be laid in a bookshop. All the right properties of a Christmas story will be injected, I can guarantee you that. It will be laid on a whistling snowy day near enough Christmas to have the proper cachet; and thru the windows people are seen hastening to and fro along the slippery pavement, with heads bowed against the sleety weather, and arms so full of parcels that they capsize frequently with a great scattering of bundles and flashing of Coles Phillips limbs. Now where, I beg you, is the authentic spirit of Christmas more happily manifest than in a bookshop? For in bookshops all the immortal writers who have made Christmas what it is speak down to us from the shelves. My heroine—Ah, how clearly I can see her coming in thru the door, with a sparkle of tiny moistures on her fur collar, in which her pink chin is exquisitely nestled; I can see those packages she is carrying, and in particular the one mysterious parcel on which the whole action of the tale depends; she is a regular customer of that bookshop, and, as many regular customers do at Christmas time, she asks permission to leave a package there while she does some shopping elsewhere. And then, of course, our luckless bookseller, much harassed by pressure of business, gets the parcels mixed up—I can make that quite plausible, I assure you—Yes, and I have forgotten to tell you how the bootlegger comes, into the story. (Perhaps it will be called "The Bootlegger's Christmas," for that bootlegger is an essential joint of machinery in the plot.) Please do not misunderstand me: I do not mean that bookshops have any necessary connection with bootleggers; my point is that a bookshop is the most adventurous and glamorous of places in the Christmas season; almost anything might happen in a bookshop, and, indeed frequently does.

The more I think about this story, the better I like it. There will be a generous allowance of wind-brightened cheeks in it; eyes will shine along the bookshelves; what a genial bustle of wrapping paper and string; what a lot of snow; what a charming bookseller there will be to play the heroic rôle; and the subsidiary romance too, with the lovely college girl who is working in the shop; you might just let me know if there are any additional elements you would like to have inserted: if you stipulate soon enough there will be no extra charge. If there are any of your favorite, best-loved books you would like to have mentioned, say the word at once: I could work them in as Christmas presents being bought by the people in the story; if you have any particular choice as to colors of eyes, or the college the adorable young book cellarette should come from, speak up! Pathos, now; how much pathos do you require? Ragged children? Salvation Army lassies? Hard-hearted cynics who phoo-phoo the whole Christmas racket, you like them too? Would you rather have the bookshop a second-hand one anyhow, and so break the heart of Old Fred Melcher, the editor of the Publishers' Weekly, who is so eager to have this story written in a way that will be a stimulus to the regular trade?

I'd sit down right away and tackle that story, but no author can afford to write a Christmas story at Christmas time and put it away until next August when the editors begin to shout for Christmas stuff. Oh well, Merry Christmas anyhow!

Arbitrator's Report on New York Printing

THE deciding factor in the recent award of continued high wages to the New York composing rooms was the general prosperity of the industry. Dr. Elliott reports that the printing houses were busy and that it was not demonstrated that the industry cannot carry forward under present conditions.

The arbitration was between the Closed Shop Branch of the New York Employing Printers' Association and Typographical Union No. 6, and the hearings were held at the meeting house of the Society for Ethical Culture. The Union, which had received a wage increase a year ago and a change to forty-four hours on May 1, asked for a $5 wage increase as of October 1 and the Employers asked $10 decrease. As the decision created such uniform surprise in the trade, the arbitrator's line of reasoning is of special interest.

Opinion of the Arbitrator

Inasmuch as the new contract was to go into effect on the 1st of December, 1921, an urgent request was made that decision be rendered before that date. This has left the arbitrator a comparatively short time in which to examine and weigh the voluminous material presented, and to attempt to give in adequate form the underlying grounds of his decision. All the evidence has been carefully considered, and the arbitrator wishes to express his admiration of the thoro and sound work contained in the briefs from both sides.

Sincere and hearty co-operation among all the branches of an industry are indispensable to the welfare of that industry and anything which militates against genuine co-operation is a menace, and the arbitrator would like to here call attention to the offer made by the Employers for a Joint Committee to determine wage scales based on a careful study of production, costs and values contributed. Such joint undertakings must necessarily add both to the definite knowledge of important facts in industry which today are often not available and to an enhancement of the spirit of co-operation. The arbitrator, however, cannot help mentioning that it was with regret that he found the passage in the Union's rebuttal brief, dealing with the subject of Labor's growing distrust of arbitration. This passage, he believes, both in tone and in thought is disappointing and in some measure lessens the quality of a document which was in many ways, both in regard to spirit and content, most admirable.

In regard to a wage differential, the arbitrator is of the opinion that the differentials should not be decided entirely on precedent and present conditions, which are often the result of mere wage bargaining power, that they should be determined over and above a living minimum by the value of the service. This again must be judged to no small extent by the skill and quality of the service rendered. It is admitted, I think, that in this respect both the League and Typographical Union No. 6 hold a unique position. Nowhere in this country, and so far as the arbitrator knows nowhere in the world, has there been such co-operation between an Employers' group and a Trade Union for the improvement of standards of workmanship. The arbitrator believes that it will be the quality of workmanship much more than any adjustment of the wage scale that will eventually increase the prosperity of the industry as a whole.

However, he has been chiefly occupied with the statements made in regard to the cost of living, general economic conditions and the conditions existing in the printing industry. Each has presented its own difficulties.

It was asserted by the representatives of the Union and not denied by the representatives of the League that any rise or fall in the cost of living was not to be the sole ground for a wage determination. Yet each of the briefs devoted considerable space to the subject, and no small amount of data was presented. The calculations, however, arrived at results between which there was a wide divergence. Both sides made use of the government figures, the Union presenting a caveat in the matter of rent figures.

By using the government figures as a base, making some alterations in the matter of rent, going over the Union's budget and modifying some calculations, it was possible to arrive at a conclusion which, while above the League's estimate, was below that of the budget presented by the Union. Thus the arbitrator was able to arrive at a standard which, while only an estimate, was one which he took into consideration in the final decision. This he felt bound to do because of the emphasis laid upon the point by both sides.

The subject of economic conditions presented the greatest difficulty. The arbitrator was practically limited to the data presented in the briefs and sur-rebuttal. This data, while quite extensive, seemed in many particulars inadequate. That there has been in the period thru which we have just passed a decline in the volume of some of the important branches of the business there seems no question. As to the decline in the profitableness of the business which is now being done, the data given was quite insufficient to make anything like a scientific determination of conditions possible. Facts were presented by the Union in response to some of the statements of the Employers' brief which indicated a wholesome condition in the industry. It was regrettable that under the conditions previously agreed to in the matter of hearings and to the need for a prompt decision, the Employers did not have more time for sur-rebuttal on this point.

One fact agreed to by both sides, however, was that there had been little fluctuation in the number of compositors employed, that in the period of depression thru which we have passed the body of workmen under consideration had been steadily engaged. Most, if not all, of the charts and figures presented indicate a somewhat improved outlook for business in the future. The arbitrator believes, however, that we are still too near the rapids to permit of much moving in the boat.

While it is not a time for an increase of wages, neither has it been demonstrated that the industry cannot carry forward under present conditions.

The arbitrator believes that he can render the industry the very best service by maintaining essentially the status quo.

American Book Prices Current for 1919-1920

THE American Book Prices Current, a record of the prices of books, broadsides, autograph letters and manuscripts sold at auction in New York, Boston and Philadelphia, during the season of 1919-20, compiled from auction catalogs, making the twenty-sixth annual volume, limited to 600 copies, and published by E. P. Dutton & Company, of this city, has just appeared. Its publication has long been overdue on account of strikes in two successive years in the printing trade.

The season of 1919-20 was opened by C. F. Heartman on September 8 and closed by Stan V. Henkels on July 20. Including and between these dates 109 sales were recorded, ten less than for the preceding year. It is probable, however, that several minor sales were omitted because of more valuable lots in more important sales and that the number actually held was about the same as the year before. Of these, forty-four were held at the Anderson Galleries, seventeen at the American Art Galleries, fifteen by Stan V. Henkels, fourteen by C. F. Heartman, twelve at the Walpole Galleries, and seven by C. F. Libbie & Company. This volume contains 1,042 pages and 14,786 lots selected from 80,346 exceeding $5 in value. This makes a larger volume than its predecessor and we venture to say the largest of the entire series.

The most valuable library dispersed during the season was that of Henry F. Du Puy which realized $160,338.35, the highest price any collection of Americana has ever brought at auction. A remarkably complete series of the Jesuit Relations of forty-two volumes fetched $19,000 also the highest price ever paid for a single lot of Americana. Pressing the Du Puy collection closely came the libraries of Buxton Forman and Walter T. Wallace. Other very important libraries were those of Evert Jansen Wendell and Edwin B. Holden. Prices did not appear to be much affected by the death of George D. Smith which occurred a few days before the Forman and Wallace sales.

An interesting part of the season's business was that of the sale of autograph letters and manuscripts. In 1896, the first year that they were listed separately, there were 505 lots that brought $3 and upwards, the highest price recorded for any letter or manuscript being $55 for a letter signed by John Paul Jones. The record of 1919-20 furnishes a striking contrast and emphasizes the importance that this class of material has assumed in the collecting world. In this volume, there are 662 lots and all, save in a very few instances, exceed $50 in value. Thirty-seven lots brought prices ranging from $1,000 to $16,250. Shelley's manuscript of "Julian and Maddalo," broke all records selling for $16,250; Lamb's "A Dissertation upon Roast Pig," a short manuscript of four pages, came next at $12,600; Poe's short story, "The Spectacles," $9,100; Pope's "Essay on Man," $5,500; Kipling's first "Jungle Story," $4,000; and a book with two signatures by Thomas Lynch, Jr., Signer of the Declaration of Independence, $3,000. This is certainly an extraordinary record.

Twenty-five years ago broadsides were not listed separately and were regarded lightly. Now the more important—those above $50—fill eleven pages ranging from $50 to $810. This record speaks very clearly upon the interest now taken in them by collectors. There is now a wide spread appreciation of the historical value of many of these single sheets and it seems to be growing year after year.

Prices were, thruout the long season with a single exception, high and well sustained. Choice lots of every description—illuminated manuscripts, early printing, early English literature, masterpieces of all periods, association books, colored plate books, Americana, choice sets of standard authors, fine bindings, autograph letters and manuscripts—all seemed to be in demand and many new high prices were made all along the line. The single exception was the Wallace sale which A. Edward Newton referred to in a recent essay as a "holocaust." It is probable that even the result of this sale was beneficial in the end as it demonstrated that there were things that could not be done without serious consequences and they have never been repeated.

All who have to do with rare books, broadsides, autograph letters and manuscripts feel grateful that the changes of time have not affected the continuity or expanding usefulness of this indispensable reference work. And all, doubtless, wish that its publication might be a little more prompt and sympathize with its publishers in the trouble and delay that labor strikes have brought them. We hope that these now are at an end and that lost time may be made up. The next volume will be awaited impatiently, for it will be an important one, recording as it will the stabilizing of values that has been going on for a year or more.

"MISS LULU BETT" has arrived at the distinction of a third finale," says the New York World. "In the 'movie' version Lulu flares up and smashes Dwight Deacon's dishes. It occurs to us, out of our own appreciation of Dwight, that here is the essence of a happy ending."

An International Traveler

Harry M. Snyder Returns from His Second Trip to the Orient

WHILE the attention of all the world is riveted on the Pacific and the better relations that should be built up by all those bordering upon it, the book-trade is interested also, and an interchange between the Orient and ourselves on the printed word is one of the most important ties to be developed. It is very significant just at this time when it is more and more realized that we are to be now forever in close contact with the people across the Pacific that American publishers have been increasing their contact with those countries, a contact that will increase and should increase in the cause of better mutual understanding.

A year ago, Harry M. Snyder made his first trip to the principal Oriental cities in the interest of a dozen American publishing houses, carrying with him a large collection of books for display. He started on his second trip the first of May of this year, returning after six months' travel. Mr. Snyder has been making his reports to the publishers, who are increasingly satisfied with the potential possibilities of this contact. The route has covered Hawaii, Japan, China and the Philippines.

The Targest of the outlets in the East is Tokyo. Not only is there more interest in American books, than there is in any other city, but the sale of books has been aided by a well established jobbing outlet. Japan does not offer an outlet for fiction, children's books or diversional literature of any kind. The Japanese, at least in their reading in foreign languages, are almost invariably serious students, wishing principally to understand the viewpoint of other peoples. They want to read on world affairs, history, philosophy, on our attitude on Far Eastern problems, our business literature, economics, etc.

The Japanese booksellers endeavor to meet this need, and the appreciation shown of Mr. Snyder's coming out with a full line of samples is indicative of their approach to the problems of book distribution. Many American booksellers who look upon the coming of a publisher's representative as a thing to be slighted as deftly as possible might take note of the careful methods of their Oriental brothers. The great book firm of Maruzen in Tokyo has previously been visited by members of the American book-trade, but only in the way of courteous visits from heads of houses traveling in the East, or possibly from someone who carried catalogs that might be checked up. When they realized that there was in Tokyo a display of about fifteen hundred books with a representative fully competent to go thru and discuss the catalogs of a dozen important publishers, they settled down immediately for serious business, giving a full day to the examination of each line and bringing to each consultation a fully checked list of all stock and past sales.

Such thoroughness gives their purchasing a very careful relation to their needs.

At the time of this second visit, they arranged with Mr. Snyder that there should be a public view of the books, and the rooms were crowded with people anxious for this opportunity to be in intimate touch with the present developments in book publishing. The Japanese are courtesy itself in giving attention and extending hospitality to such a visitor, and the experience in Tokyo was typical of that in other Japanese cities.

In China, by far the best outlet for American books is Shanghai, where publishers have always been well represented, but besides this city Mr. Snyder visited Hong-Kong, Canton and Peking. In Shanghai one comes in contact with a great many Chinese who have been educated in America, as several hundred students come here each year. To an American traveler the Chinese are more open and informal than the Japanese, and one feels immediately that they understand the American traveler and that they are willing to throw off any business restraint to enjoy a pleasant and informal evening.

During the trip to Manila this year Mr. Snyder made the acquaintance of General Wood and Governor W. Cameron Forbes, who afterwards made the trip to Hong-Kong on the same steamer. Mr. Forbes's new book, "Romance of Business," was one of the books being sold on the trip, which gave a very natural point of contact.

Honolulu is naturally a good center for book-selling, being aided by two good outlets, the Patten store and Hawaiian News and Thrums Limited. In the interest of these two stores, Mr. Snyder opened his samples for display to the public, and for two days special customers of one store came in and for two days the special customers of the other, and then the admittance was made general. This display assured the dealers of several thousand dollars worth of orders to supplement their stock orders.

One of the passengers home on the steamer was John Hays Hammond, who had made a trip to the Orient, and he was found to be keenly interested in the fact that American publishers were establishing this important new connection in the East, with which he had not become acquainted. His international mind could readily grasp the significance of the event.

Reminiscences of a Book Scout

By Joseph Jewett Barton

II. From Napoleon's Library

SOMEWHERE this side of Canal Street in the French quarter of New Orleans, I first became acquainted with Napoleon. I don't remember exactly where it was, but I think it was on Royal Street—anyhow it wasn't far from Jackson Square.

A little dried up Frenchman kept the place and he said the books were brought to him by a Portuguese sailor who picked them up in Brazil.

It's interesting to figure how certain books happen in such unaccountable surroundings, and the travels, conditions and sights some of them have endured and enjoyed. These books I will have to describe from memory, as I have lost my notes on them and if my bibliography or history gets twisted, at least the main incidents are correct. There were two volumes, small octavo, bound in dark green morocco with rose moire silk doublures, by a French binder whose name was on the inner cover, but which I have forgotten. Both volumes were stamped on the back and front covers with a coat of arms in an oval about two and a half inches long, in heavy gold leaf, and the backs were sprinkled with honey bees, also in gilt. Printed in Paris in 1807, it was a history of the reigning house of Baden or some such duchy.

The store-keeper insisted they had belonged to Napoleon Bonaparte; this was my first acquaintance with Bonaparte and I was a little skeptical, but I paid him the ten dollars he wanted, on suspicion. The coat of arms didn't look like France to me, and other amateurs to whom I showed them couldn't see France in them, but they were France all right.

On my return to New York I took them up to the Public Library and saw somebody who was supposed to know all about such things and he told me they were an archiepiscopal coat of arms, tho the honey bees might be Napoleon; anyway, we would look them up further and in some book on heraldry we finally located the arms, and the little dried Frenchman was right.

I wrote several collectors of Napoleona telling them of my beautiful books, but nobody seemed to care much for them. Francis Wilson didn't even reply. Finally one week when business was bad, I put them under my arm and sailed uptown to try them on the dealers. Book dealers of the better class are a fine lot of men and I have always been treated fairly and courteously in my dealings with them, but if you ever have anything like books from the library of Napoleon Bonaparte, don't pick out a scorching day in July or August on which to try to sell them. These are the days that nobody wants anything except something cold to drink and very few clothes, and who cares whether Napoleon ever had a library?

I'd hate to mention the names of the people I saw that summer afternoon, most of them strangers to me, and the line of conversation they tried to put over on an unsophisticated young bookseller. According to some of them, and I let them have their own way about it when they started that tack, I would be lucky if I got ten cents each for them; Napoleon never had a library anyhow—he was too busy with women and other fighting machines.

The farther I went the worse it became. At one of the most imposing places on Fifth Avenue where they sell objects of art and curios, have a flunky at the door, oriental rugs under foot, stained glass windows and only one real customer a week (and they only need one at the prices if he or she is a spender), I was met by the first assistant, who when I asked if they were interested in such items, after inspection, pushed a button, and from somewhere in the rear or the nether regions appeared the august presence of the big boss himself, and I was commanded to show them to this gentleman. What an immeasurable distance there is between the superciliousness to the seller and the obsequiousness to the buyer in some of these places. You notice it with humor if you have at some time occupied both places. The War Lord of the establishment ran his fingers surreptitiously but lovingly over the stamped armorial devices and desired to know what I wanted for them. By this time I didn't care whether I sold Nap. or not and I became as ignorant as Ole Skjarsen, and explained that I didn't know what they were worth; would he kindly make me an offer, if he could use them. He could use them, but really he wasn't prepared to make an offer; I must state how much I wanted for them, and there we stuck.

Much might be said pro and con against this arrangement, which is generally universal among book and curio dealers, but I'm not going to say it, except that I think dealers should study more carefully physiognomy, human nature, and the individual who comes to sell; that they more often lose a good profit by not making a fair offer, than make a big profit by letting the seller guess at its value, or else drive him off to some other less particular buyer.

I walked out and I know that dealer lost at least $40.00 profit by not making me a reasonable offer; that was one of the days on which I would have taken about half of his retail selling price. Thank the Lord that kind of peddling days are over; if anybody wants my books now they have to come where I am.

I sold them eventually to the late George Smith for a song, but it wasn't one of those cheap music hall songs.

OUR MESSAGE TO FATHERS AND MOTHERS

By EDWARD ANTHONY

Buy books for the children! Oh, do not delay!

Buy bushels, O mommers and pops!

Go squander your purses on stories and verses!

Spend money in all of the shops!

Go off on the book buying spree of your days!

Back a wagon alongside the door

Of a bookery near and announce so they hear,
"I want every book in the store!"

There's that hand book for Scouts that you promised to Ned!

And the hist'ry you promised to Joe!

And the volumes for Willie and Jennie and Tillie,

Luella and Arthur and Flo!

What a cause to be serving! What pleasure to ask

My readers to part with their pelf

For tomes for the youthful! In fact, to be truthful,

I'll soon have one ready myself!

Chicago Book Promotion

WHEN the Chicago Booksellers' League organized a year ago, its first joint enterprise was an effort to increase the general interest in books as gifts thru co-operative advertising in the Chicago papers. In this way they raised a fund of one thousand dollars, partly from booksellers and partly from the Chicago publishers. The idea seemed so effective that they are going further with it this year and are printing a series of fifteen advertisements, running simultaneously in four Chicago newspapers, a total of six thousand lines. Twenty-five hundred dollars has been raised for this fund, and nearly a score of publishers have contributed to the amount, including all of the Chicago firms and ten others from other cities who have become much interested in the project.

The general idea has been to use the names of important people and what they have said about books to center people's attention on the important place of books as gifts. In the series as so far prepared there are quotations from Jane Addams, Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, Rt. Rev. Francis C. Kelley, Archbishop Mundelein, all local names of prominence, and from the writings of Woodrow Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt, Gladstone and Henry Ward Beecher. The following is the full text of what was written by Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, famous Jewish leader, for the Committee, and is a fine appeal for a wider book interest, but only part could be contained in the Booksellers' League advertisement.

"I speak out of my own experience. I found books to be my best and staunchest friends. They came to visit me whenever I asked for their company. In days of my happiness they were at my side, and their speech never failed to add new joy to my heart. When clouds of sorrow dimmed my vision these dear friends of mine helped me carry the burden. They pointed out stars behind the mist. They took me to distant lands and helped me to know that the earth was my home and made me feel at home in every land under the sun.

"With books as my guides I visited the Alps and the Apennines. I rested under the palm and pine. They showed me the steppes of Asia, they uncurtained the mysteries of Africa's darkest corners. They revealed to me the beauties of Norways fjords and of Alaska's glaciers. I sang with Goethe and thought with Emerson. I studied life under Ibsen, and Victor Hugo spoke to me of the eternal conflicts of the human soul.

"Much I owe to the teachers under whom I sat face to face. But infinitely greater is my debt to the great I never beheld in the flesh, whose appeal and advice came to me in the printed page. The Arabs claim that every word between the lids of their Koran is divine. This claim holds good for every word in a good book whatever may be the religion or the nationality of its author."

says about books:

“One of the most thrilling experiences at Hull House is to see from time to time a boy or girl really waking up to the world of books. This is especially true when the experience comes to a child of illiterate parents, who is the first of his line to break out to that recorded life which surrounds and completes our individual experiences.”

Adventures of a Bookseller

By Ketch

XXVII. Miss Vampet's Romance. Part I

A T a few minutes after ten Miss Vampet went to the telephone and called her home—as was her daily habit.

"Hello, mother? How are you feeling? That's good! What are you doing? You are! Well do you think you ought to? Yes, I'll be home at the usual time. . . . All right, dear—" Then in a low and secret voice, she added, "Listen mother, any mail for me? There is! Where's it from? Oh mother! Listen now, can't you send it down? Good! Tell him I'll give him a quarter if he will. . . . Well goodbye."

An hour later her little brother came in with a letter and Miss Vampet gave him a kiss and a quarter, and lost no time in ripping the letter open. As she read her color mounted; small smiles played about her lips, and small sighs escaped them, and as she finally finished, she sat for a moment in an attitude that was almost devout.

At this moment Miss Gentleways came up, and seeing the letter, exclaimed,

"Oh Vampy! Did you hear from him?"

Miss Vampet clasped Miss Gentleways to her bosom and pressed her cheek to her own.

"Peg!" she cried. "He's coming!"

"Coming!"

"Coming! Coming to visit us. Oh,"—trembling like a leaf, but smiling—"What shall I do?"

"Do?" said Miss Gentleways. "Why take him in and feed him, of course! Pies and cakes and candy and—"

"And fried chicken on Sunday! That's the way to a man's heart—isn't it, Mr. Ondeck?"

Ondeck, who had just approached, looked at them quizzically.

"I didn't hear the first part—so I don't know what you're talking about," said he.

"We say the quickest way to a man's heart is thru his stomach—now isn't it?"

"Why—ah—yes," said Ondeck carefully. "If his stomach happens to be the biggest thing about him but who wants that kind of a beast?"

Both ladies appeared shocked, and appealing to each other, established the fact that Mr. Ondeck's wife had probably got him that way, but without letting the poor man know it.

Later in the day, during a dull moment, Miss Vampet said to Ondeck,

"Come here, Mr. Ondeck—I want you to help me."

"Help you? Gladly, if I can."

"Well, you can. You see, I want to get a gentleman friend of mine a present, just some little thing, y'know. Now you're a man, and you ought to know what he would like."

"But, my dear," he protested, "men have very diverse tastes. If I knew him now—"

"You've got to help me!" she exclaimed.

"Would a book be all right, do you think?"

"Can he read?" said Ondeck with surprise.

"Now, listen here, young fellow," said she, severely, "He has a very fine mind—oh, a wonderful mind—"

"Then how about this," said Ondeck, picking up a volume of "Songs of Men."

"Oh, not poetry!" exclaimed Miss Vampet.

"Well, well," said Ondeck, replacing the volume. "I thought you said he had a mind."

SHE SAT FOR A MOMENT IN AN ATTITUDE THAT WAS ALMOST DEVOUT

And with that he walked away, which was just as well for him perhaps, as Miss Vampet was by this time quite indignant. The day wore on, and she was no nearer to a solution to her dilemma than before, and as evening approached the poor girl was quite mentally weary from the effort of solution. She appealed to Miss Bittersweet, but rejected all her suggestions; she interviewed Mr. Detail, who favored cigars—but Miss Vampet was planning a reform there, so she rejected that tip so energetically that Mr. Detail withdrew from the advisory counsel; she spoke again with Miss Gentleways, who was so full of ideas that Miss Vampet became fuddled, and at four o'clock she retired into her own counsel, and sat paging thru a gift catalog almost with indifference. At this moment Mr. Ondeck approached and began:

"Now, Miss Vampet, I—"

"Don't speak to me!" snapped that perplexed lady. "I don't want to hear anything you have to say!"

Mr. Ondeck sighed.

"I thought perhaps I could help you. but—"

Miss Vampet looked at him suspiciously.

"If you have any real suggestions to make," said she severely, but relenting a little, "I would be glad to hear them—but you always get smart."

"Now, see here, young lady," he answered sharply, "you're so nasty nice you wouldn't take a suggestion, no matter how good it was! You think you're getting a present for some Olympian, when the fact is, he's skin and bone just like the rest of us. Why anything that has been suggested today would probably go big with him; but 'oh no! Heavens, not that!' and 'oh my! That wouldn't do at all!'—Nonsense! If you really want to settle the thing, just let me blindfold you, and we'll take the first thing you touch."

Miss Vampet laughed a little apologetically, and laying her hand on his arm gave it a squeeze.

"I know you think I'm foolish," said she. "But then, you know, he is such a wonderful character! He's deep, Mr. Ondeck—oh you ought to read his letters! He's not just an ordinary 'fellow.' And then, he has sent me such perfectly marvelous things! Oh I wish you could understand!"

"I do," said Ondeck, with evident feeling. "I begin to see what you mean. He's not just the ordinary 'good fellow,' but—"

"That's it! That's it!" she cried. "He's different, Mr. Ondeck! And that's what makes it so hard to give him anything."

"Exactly," he said emphatically. "Well I did have a suggestion, but I am afraid you would—"

"Oh no!" she exclaimed eagerly. "I'm not mad any more. Really I'm not. Come—let's have it."

Now during this entire conversation Mr. Ondeck's left hand had been kept cautiously behind him, but he now brought it out and laid before her a Bible.

"Surely this paragon would be satisfied with nothing less," said he.

With one hand Miss Vampet reached for the shears, and with the other for Mr. Ondeck's ear; but he was too quick, and lost no time placing a table between himself and the enemy.

"No mind; no heart; just stomach," said he sadly. "Lord, what a judgment!"

Gridiron Club Banquet

At the famous Gridiron Club's December banquet, which is always one of Washington's lively events, a bookstall was made a feature of the occasion. H. G. Wells, who was among the guests, was touted as "the only man who ever wrote a historic account of pre-historic events," and Tumulty was hailed as the author who knew his business better than Boswell.

Australian Authors' Association

AUTHORS' associations have been formed recently in Melbourne and Sydney in connection with the Australian Journalists' Association," says The Bookfellow. "Including a number of working journalists, writers of tales and novels; the membership has stated practical aims to reinforce the general object of 'promotion of Australian literature.' A definite campaign is planned against the imported serial story which flourishes in many daily and weekly newspapers—purchased from the English agents of such writers as Le Queux and Oppenheim for £5 to £10.

"Some speakers at the Sydney meeting referred to the disproportionate attention given by booksellers to imported books; but direct action is first to be taken in regard to the syndicate story. Newspaper proprietors are being urged to patriotic preference; and it was resolved in Sydney 'that the N.S. Wales Authors' Section of the A.J.A. support the Victorian section in its efforts to secure a high tariff on imported syndicated and serial story matter.'"

The Postmaster General's Report

THE report of the Postmaster General for the year ending last June has just been issued, showing that there is a large deficit that needs adjustment, a total audited deficiency of $157,517,688 and a total expenditure of $620,993,673. Increased payments to the railroad have been the heaviest item in making this deficit. The Postmaster General calls for further increases in salaries, in order to compensate adequately those who continue in the service. Some of the recommendations for Department improvement are:

That there should be a fee collected where directory service is given in post offices to mail, insufficiently or improperly addressed.

That there be a charge for a return receipt for registered articles.

That the Department be permitted to restrict at the Postmaster General's discretion the application of special delivery service to first-class matter.

That the expense of surety bonds for officers and employees be replaced by a guaranty fund maintained by assessments against such officers and employees.

That a provision be made for the prepayment by the advertisers of postage on replies to advertising matter.

Post offices have increased by 2,522, making a total of 52,188. The average salary of clerks runs to $1717 and of carriers to $1697. Mr. Hays points to an economy of $6,000,000 saved thru the readjustment of contracts with the furnishers of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers.

A Good Holiday Book Page

JOHN V. A. Weaver devoted part of his column, "Personally Conducted," in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle of December 3, to a discussion of the high spots of fall publications under the heading "Looking Over the Fall Season," and the rest of the column to a list headed, "Our Christmas Suggestions." This list had sub-heads. "For Almost any Adult," "Not For Grandparents," "Travel and Essays," "Biography," "These Are Funny," "Poems," "For the Younger at Heart." Did Mr. Weaver also compose the other list on the same page with its excellent headings, grouping the books just as the busy shopper would like to have them grouped? This list has a section headed "For Him" with sub-heads, "If he is a bit serious and you think he might enjoy biography, essays or history, try one of these." "If, perchance he has a well-developed sense of humor, a merry twinkle, and a chuckle you love to hear, these are sure to please," "For the man who watches wistfully the big ships steaming out of the harbour and wishes he were anywhere but here," "The man who enjoys real he-man fiction will welcome one of these—or several." "For the T. B. M. who cherishes a secret passion for detective stories and thrillers." The group "For Her—" had subheads "For the ultra moderns who rather enjoy being shocked," "For those who don't," "There is no frigate like a book," (etc.) "For Them" was divided into three groups: "For the Boy"; "For Little Sister"; "For the Wee Ones."

Book News to Teachers

A BOOK page of unusual importance is that which has begun to appear in the Journal of the National Education Association thru the new policy of its Editor, Joy E. Morgan. This Journal, because of its official standing, has a very wide influence, and this new emphasis on books and general reading will be a step toward developing one of the greatest fields of book interest that could possibly be tilled, that of Americas 700,000 teachers. This movement, taken at the time when schools are discussing actively the importance of libraries, not only in high schools but grade schools, opens up interesting possibilities, as the emphasis is not on any one type of book, but on general literature.

These book pages of these first two months consist of a selection of titles and descriptive notes taken from the monthly Booklist of the American Library Association, and titles as varied as "The Americanization of Edward Bok," Franck's "Roaming Thru the West Indies," Galsworthy's "Plays," Zona Gale's "Miss Lulu Bett," etc. are selected. The Editor writes that they expect to develop and extend the book features of the Journal, and by the time of the first anniversary number of January it will be a sixty-four-page monthly.

Huge Printing Totals

THE report of the Government Printing Office points to an expenditure of $11,111,111 as compared to $13,000,000 the previous year. Some conception of the size of this business can be seen when it is pointed out that there were used 50,000,000 pounds of paper. This total is probably more than was used by the entire school book industry of the country to supply the 20,000,000 school children. It is easily more than was used by the entire trade book and subscription book industry.

The Delicate Touch

Editor, PUBLISHERS' WEEKLY:

A middle-aged man recently appeared in a New England library representing himself as connected with a historical society in New York State, and inquired for the names of the officers of the local historical society. He later called on one of these and told a story of an emergency need for a small sum of money to enable him to continue his journey.

He appears to have been an impostor. The description of the stranger and his methods recall the amiable gentleman who, a dozen years ago, victimized many librarians and museum curators in a manner so artistic and graceful that many of the victims felt repaid for the small loans extracted.

It may be well, however, for librarians to be on their guard in case officers of historical societies should not possess so keen a sense of humor. X.

Rare Books, Autographs and Prints

NEW etchings of Spain by Ernest D. Roth, with some drawings of Burgos, Toledo, Saragosa, Granada, and Saville are on view at the Keppel Galleries.

The final portion of the library of the late William M. Rossetti, including rare first editions and association books, are listed in the current catalog of Henry Sotheran & Company of London.

About two years ago a large exhibition of etchings by Auguste Lepere was held at the Knoedler Galleries. This month another group embracing nearly every etching done by Lepere is on view.

The collection of books, pamphlets, broadsides, prints, ship models, and paintings, the collection of Frederick J. Peters, of Little Neck, Long Island, sold at Anderson's, December 8, brought $47,219. The portrait of Washington painted by James Sharpless fetched $3,800.

A further selection of rare and valuable books from the famous Britwell Court Library, the property of S. R. Christie Miller, consisting of early English poetry and other literature, will be sold at Sotheby's in London on February 6-10.

The Sons of the Revolution will petition the Federal and State Governments to set aside annually January 17 in honor of Benjamin Franklin, who was born January 17, 1706. In order to honor the greatest statesman and editor of his times, the Sons of the Revolution will also request the Board of Managers to celebrate next month the 200th anniversary of the beginning in Boston of Franklin's editorial career.

Unique books are frequently discovered but seldom remain unique long. As soon as valuable books are known, a widespread search begins and generally new discoveries are made. This has been the case with the first edition of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," of Poe's "Tamerlane," and many famous books that might be mentioned. Not long ago H. R. Wagner, the collector of Far Western Americana, thought he had the only copy of Lorenzo D. Aldrich's "A Journal of the Overland Route to California," published at Lansingburgh in 1851, but the Cadmus Book Shop has just discovered another copy.

Among the rarities described in the current catalog of Maggs Brothers of London is Ludolphus's "Vita Christi," Lisbon, 1495, with the four remarkable full page woodcuts of the crucifixion, the first known Portuguese wood engravings. This is regarded as the most famous book in Portuguese typography and no other copy, it is said, has ever found its way out of Portugal, not even during the period of the Spanish conquest were the Spaniards able to find even a single copy to send to Madrid. It is valued at the handsome figure of £2,500.

Valuable books, illuminated manuscripts, authors manuscripts, and autograph letters, selected from many consignments, will be sold at Sotheby's in London, December 19, 20 and 21. The books include early Bibles, Testaments and Psalters, early English plays, early editions of the writings of John Bunyan, Izaak Walton, Shakespeare's plays, and a collection relating to Mary, Queen of Scots. The manuscripts include three by Robert Burns, two musical compositions by Mozart, a poem by Scott and others. Among the autograph letters is one written by Major Andre of Revolutionary War fame. This will be the last sale before the holidays.

The Ashendene Press has recently issued the life of St. Clare of Assisi, a disciple of St. Francis and the founder of the Order of the Poor Clares who still cling to the Franciscan austerities. It is printed after the lapse of three hundred years from a manuscript that St. John Hornby bought at the Vernon sale in 1918, the author being Ugolini Verini, a Florentine poet, who died in 1505. It was written in Italian for the nuns of Santa Chiara Novella, in a delicate humanistic hand and is perhaps the identical copy given to that convent.

An advance copy of Antiques, a new monthly periodical the first issue bearing the date of January, 1922, published in Boston and edited by Homer Eaton Keyes has just come to hand. It is handsomely printed on heavy coated paper, 9 by 12 inches, profusely illustrated, with forty-eight pages of text and with tinted cover. Among the special articles are "Playthings of the Past," by Alice Van Leer Carrick; "Early Pottery of New England," by Walter A. Dyer; and "A Cabinet Maker's Cabinet Maker; Thomas Sheraton." George H. Sargent writes of "The Market Worth of Bibles." The twelve numbers of the year will make a large and handsome volume of 576 pages with several hundred illustrations—a volume of great interest to those who care for the subjects of which it treats.

The sale of books, broadsides, letters and paintings of the late Edward Tuckerman of Amherst, Mass., the late Judd Stewart of Plainfield, N. J., and others at the American Art Galleries, December 6 and 7 realized $38,903. Books and manuscripts brought fair prices. A diary of Thomas Jefferson for the year 1775, written on thirty-eight pages of an interleaved almanac entitled, "Virginia Almanack for the Year of Our Lord, 1775," the entries giving an account of Jefferson's financial transactions, memoranda relating to forming, entries relating to expenses as congressman, etc., was bought by Dr. Rosenbach for $610; an autograph letter by William Hooper, Signer of the Declaration of Independence, $430; the signature of Thomas Lynch, Jr., another Signer, $335. Cotton Mather's "Right Thoughts in Sad Hours," London, 1689, fetched $430. A china plate used by George Washington at birthday parties and later presented to Andrew Jackson by Mrs. Parke Curtis Lewis, realized $90 the highest price of the sale, Dr. Rosenbach being the purchaser.

Sometime ago William Roberts of the London Times called attention to the extraordinary fact that three copies of the first edition of Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," were sold in London at auction last season. What now seems still more remarkable is that all three copies were bought and are now owned by one dealer, Dr. Rosenbach of this city. It now appears that there are nine copies of the first edition of "Pilgrim's Progress" known, three in England, the Halford copy and those in the Rylands Library at Manchester and the British Museum. Besides the three owned by Dr. Rosenbach there are three others in this country, one each in the New York Public Library and in the private libraries of J. Pierpont Morgan and Henry E. Huntington. Bunyan has been an early favorite with American collectors. We not only possess two-thirds of the known first editions but the Lenox collection in the New York Public Library is the finest in existence.

The sale of the library of John C. Tomlinson, of this city, and library sets from the estate of Mrs. Lee McBride of Cleveland, at the Anderson Galleries, December 6 was well attended, the 359 lots bringing $4,654.65. A few of the items and the prices which they brought were as follows: Appleton's Scientific Series, 60 vols., 1896-98, $62.50; Cambridge Classics, of Homer, Virgil, Dante and Goethe, 20 vols., half levant, $105; Cooper's "Novels," 32 vols., half levant, 1859-61, Townsend edition, $89; Dickens's "Works," 60 vols., full levant, New York, n. d. $450; Dumas's "Romances," 47 vols., half levant, Boston, n. d. artists edition, $187.50; Irving's "Works," 40 vols., levant, New York, n. d., the Joseph Jefferson edition, $255; Scott's "Works," 33 vols., half levant, London, n. d. edition de grande luxe, $77.50; Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Writings," 16 vols., half levant, Cambridge, 1896-97, large paper edition, $62.50; and Washington's writings, 14 vols., half roan, New York, 1889, Letter Press edition, $92.50. Prices generally were quite satisfactory.

"Books are sometimes bought to fill space, and sometimes to beautify the shelves of the library. Some books cultivate the mind; books of history give wisdom; books of poetry, wit; books of mathematics, logic; and books on philosophy, understanding. 'Of the making of books there is no end.' But there never will be an overstock of the books I wish to make a part of my life!

"Next to my affection for my wife and children, a few friends, my job, and my garden, I cherish my books. They are my comrades in joy, my physicians in illness, and my friends always.

"Secure behind the fastness of a well chosen library, a man may meet with stoic calm 'the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune.'"

ANIMAL DRAWING BOOK

BY

MABEL LIVINGSTONE*Illustrated with Many Diagrams and Aids to Drawing*

THE remarkable feature about this Drawing Book for Young Children is to be found in the form of the instructions. These instructions are given in verses, so that the children accept them as an enjoyment rather than the bore that so many dry and prosy text-books are apt to be. The series of drawings starts with simple lines and curves and leads up to familiar animals and objects. Each series of drawings is accompanied by a proper verse of instruction.
